

The emergence of the Egyptian State

links with the landscape evolution of the Nile Delta

By Dr Ben
Pennington
Saturday January
12th 2019
1.30 for 2.00pm

Around 3100 BC, early upstream centres of culture were transformed into a larger territory encompassing all Egypt. Recent work shows the deltaic landscapes downstream to have been highly dynamic. A new model suggests that this landscape remodelling may have allowed, or even stimulated, a variety of important socioeconomic changes in this region which could have impacted upon the emergence of Dynastic Egypt.

Free to members, Visitors: £3.00
Oakwood Centre, Headley Road, Woodley, RG5 4JZ
A TVAES lecture www.tvaes.org.uk

